

At the Starting Gate

The Incoming Biden Administration's Immigration Plans

RETHINKING U.S. IMMIGRATION POLICY INITIATIVE

BY DORIS MEISSNER AND MICHELLE MITTELSTADT

NOVEMBER 2020

Immigration policy changes occurred at an unprecedented, even frenetic, pace during the Trump administration, which through more than 400 executive actions<sup>1</sup> methodically dismantled and reconstructed a system based on a worldview of immigration as a security and economic threat to Americans. The administration has sharply curtailed humanitarian protection, narrowed legal immigration channels and overall admissions, increased enforcement at the border, and reshaped relations with Mexico and neighbors further south over migration and asylum. Its actions were overwhelmingly done without Congress, which remained on the sidelines amid divisions between both chambers and political parties that have existed for two decades now.

---

The grafting of a dizzying array of Trump executive actions, policy guidance, and regulatory changes—some interlocking and thus difficult to unwind—atop a long-antiquated immigration system presents complex hurdles for an incoming administration.

A new Biden administration will confront major challenges in building a system that treats immigration as an asset and regularly manages it in times of economie boom and downturn. The grafting of a dizzying array of Trump executive actions, policy guidance, and regulatory changes—some interlocking and thus difficult to unwind—atop a long-antiquated immigration system presents complex hurdles for an incoming administration that has vowed to roll back key Trump changes and advance bold reforms.

The task will be immeasurably harder because public-health and economic responses to the COVID-19 pandemic will necessarily be the first and major priority, and possible Republican retention of the Senate would serve as a brake on the administration's agenda on immigration and other issues. President-elect Joe Biden also will be buffeted by pressure from his party's liberal wing while balancing his stated desire to appeal to all Americans—knowing that undoing some Trump policies could stoke significant migration from Central America and beyond.

At the same time, the incoming administration faces opportunities to work with Congress to build a 21st century immigration system, one with an immigrant selection system that can flexibly respond to changing economic and labor market conditions, that creates a pathway to legal status for unauthorized immigrants who are contributing members of U.S. society, and that rethinks its visa categories to attract and retain desired global talent. The incoming administration also can return the United States to its historic leadership role on the world stage in humanitarian protection, create a fair and efficient asylum system, shape enforcement policies to target those who pose a risk to society, pivot the immigration detention system away from its punitive criminal incarceration model, and develop partnerships with other countries for long-term success.

Biden made these commitments during the campaign.<sup>2</sup> None will be easy to implement, particularly when confronting the realities of divided government. They will require careful sequencing, as well as a mix of executive-branch actions, rulemaking, and legislation to accomplish.

This policy brief looks at the challenges in some of the key areas where the Biden campaign has promised action. Drawing from Migration Policy Institute (MPI) research and forthcoming policy ideas,<sup>3</sup> the brief also sketches opportunities to create an immigration system built upon a worldview of immigration as asset, one that works in the national interest and benefits the economy as well as U.S.-born and immigrant communities alike.<sup>4</sup>

BOX 1 About the Rethinking U.S. Immigration Policy Project

This brief is part of a multiyear Migration Policy Institute (MPI) project, Rethinking U.S. Immigration Policy. At a time when U.S. immigration realities are changing rapidly, this initiative aims to generate a big-picture, evidence-driven vision of the role immigration can and should play in America's future. It will provide research, analysis, and policy ideas and proposals—both administrative and legislative—that reflect these new realities and needs for immigration to better align with U.S. national interests.

To learn more about the project and read other reports and policy briefs generated by the Rethinking U.S. Immigration Policy initiative, see bit.ly/RethinkingImmigration.

1 The First 100 Days

Biden has pledged significant immigration actions within the first 100 days of his presidency. Among these: A temporary moratorium on deportations;<sup>5</sup> creation of a road map for legalization of most of the estimated 11 million unauthorized immigrants; an end to family separation, prolonged immigration detention, and the Migrant Protection Protocols (better known as Remain in Mexico) program keeping asylum seekers in Mexico for the duration of their hearings for U.S. asylum; reinstatement of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program; restoration of the Obama administration's immigration enforcement guidelines; and repeal of the Trump administration's travel ban on nationals from some Muslim-majority countries as well as its expanded definition of who constitutes a public charge for immigration application adjudication.<sup>6</sup>

While in theory executive actions can be revoked by a successor administration, some of the immigration changes President Donald Trump ordered would be easier to undo than others. A decision to require U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) to reopen the DACA program to all qualified applicants, and not just those who have previously held DACA as the Trump administration has done in light of court decrees staving off its attempt to kill the program, could extend protection from deportation and work authorization to hundreds of thousands of additional unauthorized immigrants who arrived in the country as children.<sup>7</sup> A decision by new Department of Homeland Security (DHS) leadership to revert to earlier U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) prosecutorial discretion guidelines targeting enforcement to noncitizens who pose criminal and national security risks could be done by memo; it would, however, undoubtedly prove highly unpopular within an ICE bureaucracy unshackled during the Trump administration.

Reversing the USCIS public-charge regulation will require more than the stroke of a pen. The agency likely would have to go through a notice and public comment period. Parallel State Department consular guidance on assessing intending immigrants' applications against similar public-charge standards could be undone with changes to the Foreign Affairs Manual used by consular officers.

Biden has boldly pledged that on his first day in office he will send Congress a bill that provides a road map for legalization for the unauthorized immigrant population.<sup>8</sup> Yet seeking congressional action on one of the most contentious immigration issues would inevitably be a challenging first step for the new administration, even as public support for immigration overall has risen to the highest recorded levels.<sup>9</sup> Rather than tackling a broad legalization, which congressional Republicans have traditionally opposed, the Biden team could advance proposals for granting legal status to specific populations, as MPI will outline in forthcoming work. Extending protections to current recipients of DACA or Temporary Protected Status (TPS) would be an important starting point. And other logical populations could include a broader set of unauthorized immigrants brought to the country as children, those who are married to U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents, or essential workers as defined under pandemic guidelines.<sup>10</sup>

Finally, given the incoming administration's focus on responding to the COVID-19 pandemic at public-health and economic recovery levels, much of Biden's early political capital may be invested outside the immigration realm. The Obama administration faced a similar imperative with the 2008–09 recession and was faulted by immigrant-rights groups for sidelining immigration during a period when Democrats held the White House and Congress. After Republicans regained the House in the 2010 midterms and the Senate in 2014, the administration confronted a sharply different political landscape on immigration.

2 The U.S.-Mexico Border

Trump has put his stamp in dramatic ways on the U.S.-Mexico border, most visibly with construction of 386 miles of fencing as part of a $15 billion plan to build 738 miles of barriers along the nearly 2,000-mile border.<sup>11</sup> Congress appropriated $4.5 billion for physical barriers, and the Trump administration has used emergency authorities to redirect about $10.5 billion in funds from Defense Department and other accounts.

Biden has pledged to end that emergency designation and called for a halt to any further construction of the wall,<sup>12</sup> which is being built largely in low-traffic areas. The president-elect has discussed making significant investments in screening and other "smart border" technologies to better vet arriving passenger and cargo vehicles for illegal drugs and other contraband, while also improving cross-agency collaboration and cooperation with Mexico and Canada.<sup>13</sup>

The global pandemic put a chill on migration, with Border Patrol encounters of migrants arriving at the U.S.-Mexico border in fiscal year (FY) 2020 falling to less than half the elevated level of more than 851,000 apprehensions in FY 2019, when the Trump administration confronted a surge in arrivals of Central American families.<sup>14</sup> To deal with the mounting arrivals and deter others from making the journey, the administration took a series of actions to throttle asylum at the border (detailed in the next section), and in April 2018 launched a zero-tolerance policy that resulted in the separation of an estimated 3,900 to 4,100 children from their parents before Trump rescinded it in June 2018 amid a massive public outcry.<sup>15</sup> As of November 2020, the parents of 545 of these children had yet to be located, and Biden has pledged to create a task force to do so.<sup>16</sup>

Amid the pandemic, the Trump administration turned to a 1944 health statute as authority to expel arriving migrants and asylum seekers;<sup>17</sup> between March and September, more than 205,000 expulsions, including 8,800 of unaccompanied children, had been carried out.<sup>18</sup> Even though the Biden administration could immediately lift the public-health order, doing so without having a considered new policy in place could quickly stoke major new flows at the border. Chaotic scenes of arrivals, as occurred in 2019 under the Trump administration, could narrow Biden's political maneuvering room on immigration. The Biden campaign has pledged to review the expulsion order but has not committed to lifting it immediately.<sup>19</sup>

Perhaps the most important effort that a new administration could undertake is fixing the asylum system so that it is both fair and efficient.

Border walls, expulsion orders, the near-total ending of asylum, and a 2006 congressionally mandated definition of effective border enforcement as zero illegal crossings do not represent successful, long-term strategies, nor do they meet U.S. and international law and agreements on protection. Instead, the U.S. government should aim for border management as a cross-agency, cross-governmental system that involves addressing mixed flows of economic and humanitarian migrants differently. Among MPI's recommendations: Creating multiagency reception centers near the border for one-stop screening of arrivals and speedy turnover to the relevant agency, and strengthening immigration governance within DHS.<sup>20</sup> Perhaps the most important effort that a new administration could undertake is fixing the asylum system so that it is both fair and efficient, as MPI has outlined elsewhere.<sup>21</sup>

3 Asylum, the Immigration Courts, and Refugee Resettlement

Policies narrowing access to asylum and other humanitarian protections have been central to the Trump administration's strategy to deter arrivals at the U.S.-Mexico border. Among these has been creation of the Migrant Protection Protocols (MPP) in January 2019, which has forced more than 67,000 asylum seekers to wait in Mexico pending completion of their U.S. asylum hearings; as of the end of September 2020, 24,500 cases remained pending.<sup>22</sup> Asylum has been granted in fewer than 1 percent of MPP cases, according to court filings.<sup>23</sup>

Beyond MPP, the Trump administration effectively ended asylum at the southern border by imposing "metering" to limit the number of asylum claims submitted at U.S. ports of entry daily, making migrants ineligible for asylum if they fail to apply for it elsewhere en route to the United States, pressuring Central American governments to sign asylum cooperation agreements that require them to allow asylum seekers rejected at the U.S. border to seek asylum in those countries, and narrowing the grounds for asylum.<sup>24</sup> The overlapping and interlocking nature of these changes has been intentional and will make it difficult for the courts or for a Biden or successor administration to undo.<sup>25</sup>

Biden has spoken of ending MPP during his first 100 days in office. Unwinding the program would prove more complicated than simply issuing a memo. Among the decisions: What to do with migrants currently in MPP? What about those who abandoned their cases or were denied? Beyond possible rollbacks, the Biden campaign has outlined a forward-looking vision to surge asylum officers to the border and has endorsed an MPI proposal to have asylum officers adjudicate the full merits of border asylum cases rather than just the initial credible-fear interview.<sup>26</sup> Doing so would allow for efficient, fair adjudication of the asylum caseload, rather than the current practice of sending such cases to the overloaded immigration court system, where asylum cases can take two to three years to resolve. The Biden campaign also pledged to double the number of immigration judges and support staff.<sup>27</sup>

Beyond asylum, Biden has said he intends to raise refugee resettlement places to 125,000, up from the 15,000 set by the Trump administration for FY 2021—an all-time low for the U.S. refugee program.<sup>28</sup> During this administration, the United States saw its longstanding record as top resettlement country surpassed by Canada.<sup>29</sup> Whether Biden could meet the pledged return to strength of the U.S. program remains to be seen. Dramatic cuts to refugee admissions have hit the network of nonprofit agencies that do the work of refugee resettlement hard. Resettlement capacity has decreased nearly 40 percent since FY 2017, with national resettlement agencies closing approximately 134 partner sites.<sup>30</sup> Still, with a renewed focus on protection, the promised increase in resettlement places could serve as an important signal and recommitment given record humanitarian displacement globally.

4 Congress and the Federal Judiciary

The president-elect's pledge to offer a road map to legalize much of the unauthorized population, including with a legalization program for agricultural workers, would be a major legislative lift. With Republicans perhaps retaining control of the Senate and having padded their minority in the House, the difficulties in achieving legislative success on such a highly contested issue cannot be overstated.

Biden also is expected to seek changes to the legal immigration system. Among the policy proposals his administration could consider that have been advanced by MPI and others: Creation of a "bridge" visa allowing immigrants of various skill levels to transition from nonimmigrant to legal permanent resident status;<sup>31</sup> reform of temporary worker visa programs; and an increase of employment-based green cards from the 140,000 annual cap they have been fixed at since 1990, along with creation of a mechanism to regularly adjust these numbers up or down based on economic conditions.<sup>32</sup> The proposals could, in some cases, pit Democratic constituencies against each other in the business vs. worker and the family-vs. employer-based immigration camps, as occurred during earlier immigration debates. Biden has underscored his support for the Diversity Visa Program and TPS, both of which Trump has sought to end.

---

The president-elect's pledge to offer a road map to legalize much of the unauthorized population, including with a legalization program for agricultural workers, would be a major legislative lift.

Whether the Biden administration will face the entrenched opposition in the courts that its predecessor has, on everything from the original 2017 travel ban to construction of the wall, the public-charge regulation, asylum changes, and more, remains to be seen. Given the success of Trump administration opponents in turning to litigation to slow or cancel some of the policies they decry, as well as Trump's success in getting conservatives on the bench—most notably cementing a 6-3 conservative majority on the Supreme Court with the elevation of Amy Coney Barrett—Biden critics may turn to the courts as well. Yet the litigation landscape could be less crowded, given that executive actions on immigration under Biden are not likely to match those under Trump in number, pace, or scope.

5 Immigration Enforcement in the U.S. Interior

Though candidate Trump in 2016 pledged to create a “deportation force” that would remove millions of unauthorized immigrants, ICE has not come close to hitting the highs in arrests and removals that occurred during the early part of the Obama administration.<sup>33</sup> While recent ICE arrests have surpassed those in the final Obama years (143,000 in FY 2019 versus 110,000 in FY 2016), they remained less than half of those at the peak in FY 2011 (322,093).<sup>34</sup> Likewise with interior removals: the nearly 86,000 in FY 2019 were well under the nearly 238,000 in FY 2009.<sup>35</sup>

The brake on enforcement under the Trump administration came largely from “sanctuary” jurisdictions such as California, Illinois, and New York City that limit their cooperation with ICE, given that the majority of the agency’s arrests come via transfers of removable noncitizens from state prisons and local jails.<sup>36</sup> Even as ICE nearly doubled the number of detainees it issued between FY 2016 and FY 2019, asking state and local facilities to hold detainees for agency pickup, the number declined by jurisdictions not fully cooperating with ICE increased by more than 300 percent.<sup>37</sup>

In response to the drag “sanctuary” locales have imposed on immigration enforcement, the Trump administration has sought to strip some of their federal funding, filed lawsuits, and had ICE conduct high-profile enforcement operations in their backyards. It also ended the more collaborative Priority Enforcement Program (PEP) that shared criminal justice system fingerprints with immigration databases to determine if noncitizens were removable, and reinstated the predecessor Secure Communities program, which the Obama administration shelved as more and more jurisdictions rebelled against it. Biden could be expected to reinstate PEP and seek to rebuild traditional federal-state-local law enforcement relationships with jurisdictions that have limited their cooperation.

The Biden campaign has said it would refocus immigration enforcement on serious criminal offenders and national security threats, as did the Obama administration.<sup>38</sup> Upon taking office, Trump undid targeted prosecutorial discretion guidelines, essentially making all unauthorized immigrants a priority for removal; in practice, 64 percent of ICE arrests in FY 2019 were of noncitizens with criminal convictions, down from more than 85 percent during the FY 2008–11 peak of ICE activity.<sup>39</sup>

The president-elect also has pledged to end long-term immigration detention, amid rising concerns about the conditions that asylum seekers and other migrants face in prison-like facilities run by private contractors. The average daily population of ICE detainees has already fallen during the pandemic from a high of more than 55,000 in August 2019 to about 20,000 as of September 2020.<sup>40</sup> Instead, Biden has proposed the increased use of alternatives to custody such as the family case management program, used during the last two years of the Obama administration but terminated by the Trump administration in 2017.<sup>41</sup> Evaluations of successful alternatives to detention in a forthcoming MPI report show that participant compliance can be assured given solid risk-assessment screening, sound legal advice and representation, close monitoring—electronically, where warranted—and timely resolution of cases.<sup>42</sup>

6 International Cooperation

Under the Trump administration, the U.S. government has taken a largely unilateral approach to migration, both regionally and globally, arguing that immigration policy is solely a question of national sovereignty. It seems likely that a Biden administration will try to take a more cooperative approach to managing migration, likely signing the Global Compact for Safe, Orderly, and Regular Migration that Trump opposed when it was endorsed by 152 other UN Member States in December 2018,<sup>43</sup> and engaging proactively with global conversations on managing migrant and refugee flows.

Nowhere will this be more important than in the immediate neighborhood around the United States that stretches from Canada through Central America, a region in which some of the greatest migration pressures exist. Using the threat of tariffs and offers of cooperation, the Trump administration persuaded Mexico to accept MPP, which has resulted in thousands of asylum seekers waiting in Mexican border cities, often in tent encampments and under precarious living conditions. Mexico also stepped up immigration enforcement on its border with Guatemala and in the Mexican interior. And the Trump administration struck asylum cooperation agreements with El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras, under which these countries must accept some asylum seekers turned back by the United States (though only the agreement with Guatemala has been implemented, and it has been inactive since March 2020).<sup>44</sup>

As noted earlier, Biden has promised to terminate MPP, and he says he intends to do the same with the asylum agreements in Central America. Instead, his campaign has pledged to invest heavily in economic development, public security, and the rule of law in Central America.<sup>45</sup> His strategy seeks to build a new regional system based on sustained cooperation while addressing root causes that fuel migration. Implementing this strategy will require balancing migration enforcement and humanitarian protections and designing a tailored investment strategy—all under careful sequencing given the ongoing pandemic that is expected to worsen conditions in the region.

To do this, the new administration must maintain existing enforcement efforts at the U.S.-Mexico border, and possibly even retain for a time the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) order that allows for rapid migrant expulsions, while counting on the Mexican government to maintain its own enforcement efforts. At the same time the administration winds down MPP and terminates the asylum cooperation agreements, it must invest in protection systems closer to where people live, in cooperation with Mexico, Costa Rica, and Panama as well as with Canada, while rebuilding the U.S. asylum system.<sup>46</sup> Extending seasonal work opportunities to Central Americans can provide legal channels for those who would otherwise migrate illegally due to economic factors. Sustained and successful investment in the region will require a targeted approach to establish realistic goals and measure progress with transparency and buy-in from partner governments. Finally, administering all of these pieces of a new regional strategy requires a degree of inter-institutional coordination that is hard to attain, but critical if the incoming administration is to create a new approach to regional cooperation that can help successfully manage migration.<sup>47</sup>

7 A Way Forward?

Although the Trump administration implemented drastic measures to restrict immigration, public support for immigration has increased—including support for more immigration for the first time since Gallup began polling on this issue in 1965.<sup>48</sup> There may, therefore, be opportunities for the Biden administration to advance reforms that reshape an immigration system whose legal architecture still rests largely on 1965 and 1990 amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act.

The reopening of countries after the forced immobility imposed by the COVID-19 pandemic, labor force realignments as automation and offshoring leave their mark, the growing global hunt for talent, and the aging of U.S. society are among the urgent reminders that the United States needs active, intelligent management of its immigration system—and the flexibility to adapt and adjust as conditions change. As corporate America, universities and colleges, community leaders, and others confront the sweeping immigration pullbacks enacted during the past four years, they may perhaps become more active voices for reform in Washington.

Still, given the plethora of changes the Trump administration has pushed to nearly every corner of the U.S. immigration system, and what will likely be a less-intense focus on immigration during the Biden years amid competing priorities and interests, it seems clear that the Trump stamp will remain on significant aspects of immigration for years to come.

---

The United States needs active, intelligent management of its immigration system—and the flexibility to adapt and adjust as conditions change.

Endnotes

- 1 Sarah Pierce and Jessica Bolter, Dismantling and Reconstructing the U.S. Immigration System: A Catalog of Changes under the Trump Presidency (Washington, DC: Migration Policy Institute, 2020).
- 2 Biden campaign, "The Biden Plan for Securing Our Values as a Nation of Immigrants," accessed November 3, 2020; Biden campaign, "The Biden Plan to Build Security and Prosperity in Partnership with the People of Central America," accessed November 3, 2020.
- 3 For more on the Migration Policy Institute (MPI) policy proposals advanced under its Rethinking U.S. Immigration Policy initiative, see MPI, "Rethinking U.S. Immigration Policy: Building a Responsive, Effective Immigration System," accessed November 2, 2020.
- 4 For more on the immigration-as-asset view, see Doris Meissner, Rethinking the U.S.-Mexico Border Immigration Enforcement System: A Road Map (Washington, DC: MPI, 2020).
- 5 Melissa Gomez, "Biden Commits to Moratorium on Deportation of Immigrants," Los Angeles Times, March 15, 2020.
- 6 Biden campaign, "The Biden Plan for Securing Our Values as a Nation of Immigrants."
- 7 MPI Migration Data Hub, "Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) Data Tools," accessed November 3, 2020.
- 8 Transcript of Joe Biden remarks during an appearance on MSNBC's The Last Word with Lawrence O' Donnell, May 14, 2020.
- 9 Mohamed Younis, "Americans Want More, Not Less, Immigration for First Time," Gallup, July 1, 2020.
- 10 Jessica Bolter, Options for Legalizing Unauthorized Immigrant Populations in the United States (Washington, DC: MPI, forthcoming).
- 11 Department of Homeland Security (DHS), "The Border Wall System Is Deployed, Effective, and Disrupting Criminals and Smugglers" (press release, October 29, 2020).
- 12 Alfredo Corchado, "Biden Says Border Wall Construction Will Stop if He's Elected President," Dallas Morning News, August 5, 2020.
- 13 Biden campaign, "The Biden Plan for Securing Our Values as a Nation of Immigrants."
- 14 There is considerable evidence that the number of people attempting to cross illegally is even lower in fiscal year (FY) 2020, given that the recidivism rate has jumped from 7 percent in FY 2019 to 37 percent during the pandemic. This is the result of the Trump administration's decision to expel arriving migrants and asylum seekers, citing authority under a public-health order, rather than putting them into formal removal proceedings, in essence allowing them to keep attempting illegal re-entry until they succeed or give up. See Elliot Spagat, "Migrants Quickly Expelled by Trump Try Repeatedly to Cross," Associated Press, October 28, 2020.
- 15 DHS, Office of the Inspector General, Special Review: Initial Observations Regarding Family Separation Issues under the Zero Tolerance Policy (Washington, DC: DHS, Office of the Inspector General, 2018).
- 16 Reuters, "Biden Pledges Task Force to Reunite Children Separated at U.S.-Mexico Border," Reuters, October 29, 2020.
- 17 Muzaffar Chishti and Sarah Pierce, "Crisis within a Crisis: Immigration in the United States in a Time of COVID-19," Migration Information Source, March 26, 2020.
- 18 U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP), "Nationwide Enforcement Encounters: Title 8 Enforcement Actions and Title 42 Expulsions," updated October 14, 2020.
- 19 Camilo Montoya-Galvez, "How Trump Officials Used COVID-19 to Shut U.S. Borders to Migrant Children," CBS News, November 2, 2020.
- 20 Meissner, Rethinking the U.S.-Mexico Border Immigration Enforcement System.
- 21 Doris Meissner, Faye Hipsman, and T. Alexander Aleinikoff, The U.S. Asylum System in Crisis: Charting a Way Forward (Washington, DC: MPI, 2018).
- 22 Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse (TRAC), "Details on MPP (Remain in Mexico) Deportation Proceedings," accessed November 5, 2020.
- 23 The Guardian, "U.S. Supreme Court Upholds Policy of Making Asylum Seekers Wait in Mexico," The Guardian, March 11, 2020.
- 24 Pierce and Bolter, Dismantling and Reconstructing the U.S. Immigration System.
- 25 Nick Miroff, Maria Sacchetti, and Josh Dawsey, "Trump Put Up Walls to Immigrants, with Stinging Rhetoric and Barriers Made of Steel and Regulation," Washington Post, October 31, 2020.
- 26 Meissner, Hipsman, and Aleinikoff, The U.S. Asylum System in Crisis.
- 27 Biden campaign, "The Biden Plan for Securing Our Values as a Nation of Immigrants."
- 28 White House, "Presidential Determination on Refugee Admissions for Fiscal Year 2021" (presidential memorandum, October 27, 2020).
- 29 BBC News, "Canada Resettled More Refugees Than Any Other Country in 2018," BBC News, June 19, 2019.
- 30 Silva Mathema and Sofia Carratala, Rebuilding the U.S. Refugee Program for the 21st Century (Washington, DC: Center for American Progress, 2020).
- 31 MPI has long advocated creation of a provisional, or bridge, visa that would allow workers to transition from a temporary visa to a permanent one and permitting better alignment of employment-based immigration with U.S. workforce needs. See Demetrios G. Papademetriou, Doris Meissner, Marc R. Rosenblum, and Madeleine Sumption, Aligning Temporary Immigration Visas with U.S. Labor Market Needs: The Case for a New System of Provisional Visas (Washington, DC: MPI, 2009).

- 32 MPI for years also has proposed creation of an independent body of economists, labor market and migration experts, and other analysts to advise policymakers on optimal immigration levels and to propose periodic adjustments based on labor market and economic conditions. See Doris Meissner, Deborah W. Meyers, Demetrios G. Papademetriou, and Michael Fix, Immigration and America's Future: A New Chapter (Washington, DC: MPI, 2006); Demetrios G. Papademetriou, Doris Meissner, Marc R. Rosenblum, and Madeleine Sumption, Harnessing the Advantages of Immigration for a 21st-Century Economy: A Standing Commission on Labor Markets, Economic Competitiveness, and Migration (Washington, DC: MPI, 2009).
- 33 Muzaffar Chishti and Sarah Pierce, "Trump's Promise of Millions of Deportations Is Yet to Be Fulfilled," Migration Information Source, October 29, 2020.
- 34 U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), "ERO FY 2019 Achievements," updated February 24, 2020.
- 35 ICE, "FY 2011: ICE Announces Year-End Removal Numbers, Highlights Focus on Key Priorities," updated October 17, 2011.
- 36 Randy Capps et al., Revving Up the Deportation Machinery: Enforcement under Trump and the Pushback (Washington, DC: MPI, 2018).
- 37 DHS Office of Inspector General, U.S. Immigration and Custom Enforcement's Criminal Alien Program Faces Challenges (Washington, DC: DHS, 2020), 9.
- 38 The Obama administration's 2014 prosecutorial discretion guidelines targeted enforcement to noncitizens convicted of serious crimes, threats to public safety, recent illegal entrants, and those violating recent deportation orders. MPI estimated in 2015 that about 13 percent of the unauthorized immigrant population could be considered an enforcement priority under these guidelines, down from the 27 percent under 2010–11 enforcement guidelines. See Marc R. Rosenblum, Understanding the Potential Impact of Executive Action on Immigration Enforcement (Washington, DC: MPI, 2015).
- 39 ICE, Fiscal Year 2019 Enforcement and Removal Operations Report (Washington, DC: ICE, n.d.), 13; Capps et al., Revving Up the Deportation Machinery, 2.
- 40 ICE, "Detention Management, FY 2020 ICE Statistics," updated October 14, 2020; ICE, "Detention Management: FY 2019 ICE Statistics" (dataset, n.d.).
- 41 Audrey Singer, Immigration: Alternatives to Detention (ATD) Programs (Washington, DC: Congressional Research Service, 2019).
- 42 Meissner, Rethinking the U.S.-Mexico Border Immigration Enforcement System.
- 43 United Nations, "General Assembly Endorses First-Ever Global Compact on Migration, Urging Cooperation among Member States in Protecting Migrants" (news release, December 19, 2018).
- 44 Ariel G. Ruiz Soto, One Year after the U.S.-Mexico Agreement: Reshaping Mexico's Migration Policies (Washington, DC: MPI, 2020).
- 45 Biden campaign, "The Biden Plan for Securing Our Values as a Nation of Immigrants."
- 46 Meissner, Hipsman, and Aleinikoff, The U.S. Asylum System in Crisis.
- 47 Andrew Selee and Ariel G. Ruiz Soto, Rethinking Regional Migration Policies with Mexico and Central America (Washington, DC: MPI, forthcoming).
- 48 Younis, "Americans Want More, Not Less, Immigration for First Time."

About the Authors

DORIS MEISSNER

Doris Meissner, former Commissioner of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), is a Senior Fellow at the Migration Policy Institute (MPI), where she directs the Institute's U.S. immigration policy work. Her responsibilities focus on the role of immigration in America's future and on administering the nation's immigration laws, systems, and government agencies. Her work and expertise also include immigration and politics, immigration enforcement, border control, cooperation with other countries, and immigration and national security.

From 1993 to 2000, she served in the Clinton administration as Commissioner of the INS. Her accomplishments included reforming the nation's asylum system; creating new strategies for managing U.S. borders; improving naturalization and other services for immigrants; shaping responses to migration and humanitarian emergencies; strengthening cooperation with Mexico, Canada, and other countries; and managing growth that doubled the agency's personnel and tripled its budget.

In 1986, Ms. Meissner joined the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace as a Senior Associate. There, she created the Endowment's Immigration Policy Project, which evolved into MPI in 2001.

MICHELLE MITTELSTADT

Michelle Mittelstadt is MPI's Director of Communications and Public Affairs and is responsible for developing and implementing the Institute's strategic communications and overseeing its public engagement.

A veteran journalist, she joined MPI after covering immigration policy, Congress, and border-related issues in the Washington bureaus of the Associated Press, The Dallas Morning News, and the Houston Chronicle. She has written hundreds of articles examining U.S. immigration policy, border and interior enforcement, and the post-9/11 legislative and executive branch changes that have altered the immigration landscape. She also covered the Departments of Justice and Homeland Security.

She holds a bachelor's degree in journalism with a concentration in global studies from the University of Georgia.

Acknowledgments

The authors thank Migration Policy Institute (MPI) President Andrew Selee and colleagues Muzaffar Chishti, Randy Capps, Julia Gelatt, Sarah Pierce, and Jessica Bolter for their insights and review.

MPI is grateful to the Ford Foundation, the Open Society Foundations, the Carnegie Corporation of New York, Unbound Philanthropy, and the 21st Century International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union (ILGWU) Heritage Fund for their support for this research.

MPI is an independent, nonpartisan policy research organization that adheres to the highest standard of rigor and integrity in its work. All analysis, recommendations, and policy ideas advanced by MPI are solely determined by its researchers.

© 2020 Migration Policy Institute.
All Rights Reserved.

Design: Sara Staedicke, MPI
Layout: Liz Heimann

No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopy, or any information storage and retrieval system, without permission from the Migration Policy Institute. A full-text PDF of this document is available for free download from www.migrationpolicy.org.

Information for reproducing excerpts from this publication can be found at www.migrationpolicy.org/about/copyright-policy. Inquiries can also be directed to communications@migrationpolicy.org.

Suggested citation: Meissner, Doris and Michelle Mittelstadt. 2020. At the Starting Gate: The Incoming Biden Administration's Immigration Plans. Washington, DC: Migration Policy Institute.

www.migrationpolicy.org

The Migration Policy Institute is an independent, nonpartisan think tank that seeks to improve immigration and integration policies through authoritative research and analysis, opportunities for learning and dialogue, and the development of new ideas to address complex policy questions.

1400 16th St NW, Suite 300, Washington, DC 20036
202-266-1940